

Down the Rabbit-Hole

Bored on a summer riverbank, Alice follows a waistcoated, watch-checking White Rabbit down a hole and tumbles into a slow, curious fall — the first step into a world where the ordinary rules of size and logic no longer apply.

01

A Curious White Rabbit

Idle and drowsy, Alice spots a White Rabbit muttering to itself and pulling a watch from its waistcoat pocket. Astonished, she chases it across a field and down a large rabbit-hole, never pausing to think how she'll get back out.

02

A Very Slow Fall

The hole drops into a deep, dreamlike well. Drifting past cupboards, bookshelves, and an empty jar of orange marmalade, Alice muses aloud about the centre of the earth — and whether cats eat bats — as she drifts gently downward.

03

A Hall of Locked Doors

She lands unhurt on a heap of leaves and chases the Rabbit into a long, lamp-lit hall ringed with doors — every single one of them locked, leaving no obvious way onward.

04

The Golden Key

A glass table holds one tiny golden key. It unlocks a fifteen-inch door onto a glorious garden — but Alice, full-sized, cannot fit through, however hard she longs to.

05

“Drink Me”

A bottle labelled DRINK ME — tasting of cherry tart, custard, and hot buttered toast — shrinks Alice to ten inches. Now the perfect size for the door, she realises she's left the key out of reach on the table above.

06

“Eat Me”

A small cake marked EAT ME offers another chance to change size. Alice eats it without knowing which way she'll grow — and the chapter closes on the question.
